I usually go on when students can recognize, read and write words withtarget the glued sound with few errors. When I introduce glued sounds, I like to use phonogram cards for each piece: ink, ank, onk, unk, ing, ang, ong, ung. These help students by giving them a key word for them. First, introduce the sound and pattern of spelling. Talk about different words with the same piece. Remove words using your fingers. Make sure you shape this so students understand. the first time, tell them how many sounds are in the word, pattern of finger touching every sound, and have them practice with you. Practice a little onset and rhymes with an initial sound and the piece. Having students must recognize and remember that the sound 'ingk' is always written -ink. From here you want to practice with a variety of activities that strengthen these sounds. Activity to teach pasted sound on which you are working. For example, if you taught NG, use a decodable text that focuses on NG words. Remember that decodable texts are controlled to have mostly words, phrases and skills that students have already learned. The only new skill in the text is the skill of destination. This ensures students who work on the target skill. Find and highlight each word with the pasted sound of destination before reading it. Then they can read and answer questions. This is a story I invented and printed to practice any phonic skills. Ask students to search for words and order them, from a list or a deck of flashcard, or complete a selection sheet. Words of writing with glued sounds there are so many ways to get children to write so choose your favorite and leave them practice. You can make them write from a one think of multiple words alone, or create absurd words. I usually have students using phonogram cards to create absurd words that need to read out loud and write. Blending & Segmenting You can use Elkonin audio boxes, finger tapping, phone cards, or other manipulators to have students mix and segment words with pasted sounds. Remember to be consistent with the mapping of the pieces. This page is from my Phoneme Grapheme Mapping Templates set. Dictation is good practice and instant feedback for you. Use my free model in my freebies library. All you have to do is say a couple of targets and review sounds, words and phrases that students write. You will see if they have learned skill or not. Games And of course, games! There are so many printable games or you could use a set of flashcards with target words with any table game. How to map pasted sounds This is a hot topic among educators and you will find teachers everywhere on this. There are 2 ways to map words with pasted sounds This is a hot topic among educators and you will find teachers everywhere on this.
